

Healthcare professionals: Your views about improving safety in community-based mental health services.

What is this study?

We are carrying out a study to find out more about the safety of mental healthcare delivered to adults in community settings.

Who can take part?

- Healthcare professionals and service managers who contribute to the community mental healthcare of adults within primary care or secondary care.
- We would like to speak to healthcare professionals from a range of settings, professional backgrounds, and levels of experience, including:

Psychiatrists, social workers, mental health nurses, occupational therapists, GPs, support workers, community pharmacists.

What will the study involve?

Taking part in one interview or focus group about your perspectives on safety in community-based mental health services, including suggestions for improving safety. Interviews or focus groups are likely to be conducted remotely, via a secure online platform (e.g. Microsoft Teams), and will last for up to one hour.

For further information please contact:

Phoebe Averill

 @PhoebeAverill

 phoebe.averill@kcl.ac.uk

This project is funded by

THIS.Institute